

During a period in which Colonial Penn was forced to “downsize” as a result of its losing its key customer, AARP, to the Prudential, Mr. Leban left and marked time in his own Pennsylvania practice and as “of counsel” to a Washington, D.C. firm in largely legislative and regulatory matters. For one of his clients, American Homestead, Inc., of Mt. Laurel, New Jersey, he was successful in gaining provisions of the Garn-St Germain Depository Institutions Reform Act of 1982 which enabled that company to begin to pioneer in offering reverse mortgage products to the “house-rich, cash-poor” segment of the senior population, beginning in New Jersey and Pennsylvania and later expanding to other states. Mr. Leban then joined American Homestead full-time as V.P., General Counsel & Secretary. In the mid-1980s, Congress put an end to that company’s growth prospects when it authorized the Federal Housing Administration to insure a legislatively prescribed “home equity conversion mortgage” in a “demonstration” program which soon became, de facto, permanent.

In 1987, the incoming administration of Governor Robert P. Casey in Pennsylvania appointed Mr. Leban as the chief counsel of each of the Commonwealth’s retirement systems for state, public school, and municipal employees, with then combined assets of approximately $20 billion. On the litigation side, Mr. Leban initiated retirement board proceedings and ultimately briefed and argued to the Commonwealth and Supreme Courts the high-profile “roofers’ union” cases involving the State board’s pension forfeiture orders against certain members of the state judiciary whom the Supreme Court had removed from office. On the investment side, in addition to corporate governance initiatives on behalf of the state and public school employee funds, Mr. Leban achieved national recognition for his representation of the public school fund, PSERS, as an ex officio member, along with CalPERS, on the official equity committee in Chapter 11 proceedings, In re Texaco, Inc., 81 B.R. 806 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1988). Observers credited that committee with playing a key role in the settlement of the Pennzoil-Texaco lawsuit judgment and the inclusion of important governance provisions in Texaco’s reorganization plan.

Mr. Leban left state government after the first term of the Casey administration to join the Philadelphia law firm now known as Blank Rome. As a member of the firm’s Corporate Department and chair of the firm’s Public Pension Fund Practice Group, he concentrated his work on varied corporate, tax, fiduciary, litigation, and legislative matters on behalf of both in-state and sister-state public pension funds, and provided counseling to a wide range of the firm’s corporate clients. His colleagues, Stuart Grant and Jay Eisenhofer in Blank Rome’s Wilmington office, formed their own firm in 1997, and Mr. Leban joined them soon after they commenced business.

From 1973 to 1978, Mr. Leban was a member of the Pennsylvania Humanities Council and served as its elected chairman from 1976 to 1978.

Mr. Leban resides in Wilmington, Delaware. His wife, Janet A. Leban, formerly the Executive Director of the Pennsylvania Prison Society, is the current Executive Director of the Delaware Center for Justice, Inc.
